This act of selflessness gave me the ultimate gift – a chance at life filled with love and opportunity. From the moment my adoptive parents held me in their arms, I knew I was destined for something extraordinary.

"How quickly my entire life could never have happened is not lost on me. I think about it every day and how blessed I am to be here today because one woman chose life, not for herself, but for a child she thought she would never know."

Bryan was adopted at 3-months old from Santiago, Chile and had always known he was adopted but never had much interest in finding his biological parents. Until a DNA test lit a spark that would take him on the path to meeting the woman who gave him life in more ways than one.

Bryan's story of adoption is not uncommon but his perspective is a completely unique take about the ongoing debate of pro-choice vs. pro-life. Just as Bryan's biological mother offered her child up for adoption, thousands of children around the world are alive today because somewhere a selfless and courageous woman made the most difficult choice imaginable. This book serves as a bold and impassioned plea for those that cannot speak up for themselves.
