

Did Trump Destroy The World?

Over the past few years, the presidency of Donald J. Trump has been a topic of controversy and debate. His actions and policies have had far-reaching consequences, leading many to ponder whether his time in office marked the beginning of the end for the world as we know it. In this article, we will explore the various ways in which Trump's presidency may have left a lasting impact on both the United States and the global stage.

Rise to Power

Donald Trump's unexpected rise to power in the 2016 presidential election was met with both excitement and apprehension. His unorthodox campaign style and brash personality garnered him widespread media attention, attracting a dedicated base of supporters who believed he could bring about radical change.

However, critics argued that his divisive rhetoric and inflammatory remarks could lead to increased polarization within the United States and strained relations with other countries. This skepticism only grew as Trump assumed office and began implementing his policies.

Foreign Relations

One of the most contentious aspects of Trump's presidency was his approach to foreign relations. From his critical stance on NATO to his controversial withdrawal from the Paris Climate Agreement, Trump's actions often left allies and adversaries alike questioning the stability of international partnerships.

Furthermore, his administration's hardline immigration policies and threats of trade wars caused significant strain in the relationship between the United States and its neighbors. Many argued that these policies displayed a lack of diplomatic finesse and undermined long-standing alliances, potentially weakening America's global influence.

Environmental Policies

Another area of concern during Trump's presidency was his stance on environmental policies. Trump consistently downplayed the severity of climate change and rolled back numerous regulations aimed at curbing harmful practices. Critics argue that these decisions jeopardized our planet's well-being, potentially exacerbating the effects of global warming and environmental degradation.

The withdrawal from the Paris Climate Agreement, in particular, caused a significant uproar among environmentalists, who feared that the United States' lack of commitment to combating climate change could set a dangerous precedent for other nations.

Dismantling of Institutions

Trump's presidency was marked by a series of high-profile clashes with established institutions, including the judiciary, intelligence community, and the media. His attacks on these institutions eroded public trust and raised questions about the long-term impact on democracy.

Critics argue that Trump's disregard for traditional checks and balances undermined the core principles of democratic governance, potentially causing irreparable harm to the foundations of the United States. This erosion of trust could have lasting effects on the country's political landscape and its ability to address future challenges.

Did Trump destroy the world? While it may be too early to draw definitive conclusions, there is no denying that his presidency left a significant mark on various aspects of society, both domestically and internationally. The impact of his policies, his stance on global issues, and his approach to governance will continue to be debated for years to come. Only time will tell the full extent of the consequences of Trump's time in office, and historians will likely spend decades unraveling the complexities of this controversial presidency.

Even now in 2021, we are seeing with our own eyes what such a world looks like, with the global response to the pandemic a prime example. Since the contagion started in 2020, Trump remained in the light of international media delivering his speeches but he did nothing to stopping mortality. He should have been in medical research centers rather than the White House. In May 2020, as the worldwide death toll surpassed a quarter of a million people, leaders from all over the world joined by video-conference to coordinate efforts to raise money for an effective vaccine, but Trump paid no attention to the conference.

To look into why, how and by whom the pandemical devastation started, we have to study our previous decade. Since 2010, probably even before, China's expanding manufacturing capacity became a threat to America and more than some countries of the world. No political yelp could ever diminish the Chinese business plan, and by the end of 2014, it became so serious that many countries came in the intertwinement of severe recession. Unemployment and bankruptcy started knocking the doors of many business centers across the world. The recession, which should be called 'financial blackout' was the main reason of the victory of Modi in India and Trump in America. Even after their victory, the year 2018 was the worst for millions of companies across the globe and they were not able to survive anymore. So, in order to ward off China and bring an end to the financial blackout, the pandemic erupted and that was the master-plan of Trump and his allies.

During contagion, in May 2020, the summit was organized by the European Union and ended with pledges of more than $8 billion, along with commitments by world leaders to pool their efforts to find and distribute effective medications against a virus from which none of their citizens were safe. Other than its virtual nature, it was the kind of gathering we have always envisioned when we picture global cooperation to deal with a major emergency but for one striking fact: the absence of the world's richest and most powerful country, the United States. In the midst of the kind of global crisis that would usually lead much of the world to look to Washington for leadership, the chair normally reserved for the United States was empty. This is quite evident to say that Trump wanted the world to suffer and decay. Donald Trump probably wished for an incarnation of a recession-free America and the world with revived economy, and for this, he let the havoc continue for the entire year of 2020. But his dream doomed his candidature in election 2020, and the question still persists - did Trump destroy the world or he rolled back the world where it should have been?
