You may have heard stories about Hershel of Ostropol story before. But not this one. Because, thanks to my mother and aunts, this story survived the Holocaust.

This time, the hapless, homeless and quasi-criminal Hershele - Yiddish literature's tragicomic schlemiel turned Robin Hood - relies on stinky socks, boiled chickens, and the kindness of strangers to fill his belly and his pockets.

This tale - woven from those my mother and aunts remembered after Auschwitz - is heavily peppered with my own attempts to fill in the blanks. My mother and aunts revealed only the punchlines of my grandmother's stories and their own, through laughter and tears.

Please share this story with your children in honor of my grandmother and all the storytellers we've lost.
